NICARAGUA/U.S. JENNINGS: There were some rather confusing signals today from the Nicaraguan leader, Daniel Ortega. During an interview with ABC's Anne Garrels, Ortega said he presently believes the U.S. and Nicaragua can settle their differences through negotiations. The two countries are presently talking, and Ortega said the American attitude was both positive and constructive. Ortega then went on to say, however, that the CIA was still trying to assassinate him and other Nicaraguan officials, and he concluded that the Reagan administration will do whatever is necessary to eliminate the Sandinista government.
